Tom has practiced law for 45 years and tried hundreds of cases to jury verdict. Tom's focus in construction defect work ranges from the professional side in defense of architects and engineers, to the builder's side of general contractors and subs, to developers and property managers on the ownership front. He has successfully represented every type of contractor involved in both residential and commercial construction over the decades in which construction litigation has been en vogue in Colorado.

In the malpractice arena, Tom has tried to verdict any number of cases covering the broad range of claims asserted by former clients, patients, and investors in venues from federal and state court to administrative hearings and disciplinary boards.

Mr. Alfrey represents medical device manufacturers, other health care professionals, health facilities and institutions, and is "go to" litigation counsel for several manufacturers of implant devices and cutting-edge surgical apparatuses. Tom also represents industrial device manufacturers in product failures, as well as has extensive experience in complex litigation involving mass torts and catastrophic injury.
