Rob Zavaglia has been with TAM his entire career. In professional liability litigation Rob regularly represents attorneys, medical professionals and institutions, financial planners, securities brokers, and appraisers in claims arising out of the full spectrum of their professional duties. This experience carries over into the construction world, where Rob defends architects and engineers, as well as contractors and subtrades, in both residential and commercial defect cases.

Rob's products liability defense includes extensive experience in the medical device and pharmaceutical field. He also assists corporations, common carriers, and airlines and aviation-related businesses in defense of large exposure cases involving catastrophic injuries and wrongful death across the Rocky Mountain region, both at the trial and appellate levels. Rob has more than a decade of experience defending charges of discrimination before both the Colorado Civil Rights Division and EEOC. He is currently training for his private pilot's certificate in furtherance of his aviation practice.

Rob maintains an active practice in both the Colorado and federal appellate courts. He has been specially admitted to numerous jurisdictions around the country as regional litigation counsel for his clients, and has tried cases to verdict in both Colorado and Wyoming.
